Jesse -

The presenter of district energy has been traveling today (to come to Shoreline) so we were not able to get a written response from him before tonight's meeting. He is aware of the question and hopefully can address during the presentation tonight.

How is this true? I'm not an individual buyer of natural gas, my utility is the buyer:

Also due to the long-term aggregate nature of demand, a district energy system operator can negotiate long-term fuel contracts, which facilitates greater energyprice stability for consumers.

After option P-3 gets the project but can there be a transition to a co op model? I don't the think the city should have a department dedicated to running DE as it is pretty small scale and co-ops can protect consumers from monopoly price gouging from private companies.
