I have had the experience of letting an adult family member camp in my backyard and use my house for the bathroom and kitchen. It was a difficult yet necessary thing to do and I should have the right to do it again if need be. These people couldn't afford to live in the city they grew up in even though employed. There are many reasons for the epidemic of homelessness which the city and other municipalities are not addressing. They are not all mentally ill or drug addicted. Figuring out where to put "them" is only a stop-gap. The poorer members of our families should not have to move way out in the country, far from their support systems to have a place to live.

Sincerely,
