Through a wide variety of media, artist Lucy Garnett explores her multi-national past and current identity in a large solo exhibition at Shoreline City Hall in the lobby as well as the 3rd and 4th floors. With some large-scale artworks and build-out installations tucked into corners in the city's corridors, the artist continues the tradition of transforming the civic center into a contemporary art museum. The show also features sculpture, print, video, and painting. Notations is also made possible through a collaboration with Seattle Artist League.

About the artist

Lucy Garnett is an Anglo-Indian artist living in Seattle. She taught in Oxfordshire Primary schools 1995 - 2011, and from 2002 trained as a fine artist with De Montfort University. Her final degree piece From East to Western High Street was selected by internationally renowned gallery Modern Art Oxford for inclusion in a special graduates' show for the South of England.

She works to understand complicated systems by breaking them down visually. Her musical pieces relay the experience of hours of practice, learning to play each piece of music. Her major themes include migration, human health, social justice, and family dynamics. Lucy has been an active participant in the Seattle Artist League since its founding in 2016.
